First and foremost, Jewish humor snickers in the face of authority. This tendency dates back to the first recorded laughter in the scriptural tradition, in Genesis 18:12, when the mother of the Jewish people, Sarah, laughs at the notion, delivered by divine messenger, that she will conceive a child in her dotage. Sarah's laughter is, in effect, a minor rebellion against God, who proceeds to chew her out: "Is anything too hard for the Lord?" And so, the subversive tradition of Jewish ...
